Mr. Harper was facing a revolt from his closest advisers over whether he should continue to defend his minister, Mr. Flaherty, or stand with his minister, Mr. Pettigrew, and risk losing votes from the pro-integration Bloc Québécois. The confrontation came after Mr. Lowe accused the Prime Minister of ignoring him when Mr. Lowe suggested in 2007 that Mr. Flaherty and Mr. Pettigrew be appointed to the Conservative team that could negotiate with the Bloc and seek support for Mr. Harper in any fall election. But despite their ideological differences, Mr. Flaherty and Mr. Pettigrew were not the only Conservative MPs who found themselves in trouble with Mr. Lowe, as it became known. Some of Mr. Harper's most ardent supporters—in particular, MPs such as Peter Goldring and Chuck Strahl, the founders of the influential group,
