Fermose Uninstaller is a software application that allows users to remove the installed programs from their computer.

Aesthetically, it is not very impressive because it packs a simplistic interface and only a few options for dealing with the cleaning process. It appeals more to beginners who want to get rid of some programs pretty quickly without having to go through several configuration settings and helpful tutorials. The app automatically displays the installed programs on your computer into the main window. You can uninstall programs pretty easily and you can also delete them from the list. Fermose Uninstaller provides detailed information about each installed application such as registry and display name, publisher, link, URL, contact and others. Moreover, it is possible to export to plain text different reports concerning the names of all the programs installed or general information about them. The logs can also be printed with minimum effort. It also provides an encryption tool that allows users to set up passwords. The app works fast and no errors showed during our testing. All things said, Fermose Uninstaller is a simple-to-use tool that can help you remove the installed applications from your computer on the go. It doesn't pack the advanced features for making it the most powerful tool, but it does what it says and it's also light on your system resources. Q: Parsing a char array as date with `strptime`? I have this char array: `char array[30]; fgets(array, 30, stdin);` And I want to convert it to date like this: `char array[30]; strptime(array, "%Y-%m-%d", &d);` Is there a way to do this without manually copy&paste the char array, for each date that I want to parse? I was thinking about something like this: `char *temp; for(int i=0; array[i]!='\0'; i++) *temp++ = array[i]; *temp = '\0'; strtptime(temp, "%Y-%m-%d", &d);` and to return the date (which is now in temp) as a `std::string`

7 Professional or Home Basic comes with Windows Defender. Microsoft is a good company; they create a lot of software and they are good at dealing with security issues. However, you can't trust everything that Microsoft says. You don't need to scan your whole system using Microsoft Security Essentials, because the security software only looks for viruses. Also, it's very effective, but it takes a lot of time and resources. Thus, in certain cases, it is better to use a third-party scanner.

Fermose Uninstaller is a software program that allows you to remove the programs installed on your PC. You can easily uninstall and delete programs on a Windows 7 computer. All you need to do is select it from the Start menu, go to “Programs” and select “Uninstall program”. Then, you can select the program you want to remove and click “Uninstall”. However, Fermose Uninstaller is not that popular among users because it shows a simplistic interface
