Objects The ObjectARX system provides a number of classes for handling and storing objects. Autodesk developed this to allow users to develop objects and manage them. ObjectARX, the Autodesk ObjectARX object-oriented programming language, provides a platform for the development of any object. ObjectARX builds on an object-oriented programming language called DLISP, developed by George Biagi, to include standard library support. Autodesk recommends that developers use classes based on the AutoLISP Object class. The AutoLISP API provides general data access and manipulation functions. Also, developers can add their own code to the API in the Autodesk ObjectARX. ObjectARX uses the Object class to define objects. Objects are used as local variables, including properties and methods. A program in ObjectARX can create an object from a block, command, or subroutine. An object in ObjectARX has a unique ID. An Object class can have one or more properties. A property can be a value, or a pointer to another object. Properties are stored in a dictionary.
