Download the free DLCs for Mortal Kombat 9 on GOGQ: Bound not using c-sharp expression I'm using the c-sharp expression to bind to checkbox value. Here is my code ' Text='Equipment' /> But when I bind the value, I get the following exception: The conversion of a string value failed because the string is not in the correct format. Any solution? A: If you're trying to do dynamic logic, you'll need to use Eval("_EquipmentID", false), which will evaluate the _EquipmentID property but will not set a control value. Then, you can set Checked=" if you need to do any additional logic. Sports Teams Protect Yourself From Arrest Credit: William Reichle/The New York Times As the National Football League enters the weekend, criminals are on the prowl. Sports teams, especially those with high-profile star players, are more vulnerable to the attacks of thieves. These teams, used to being in close proximity to their players, are also well-known targets for muggers. Pro athletes are treated like celebrities, with thieves as eager to make their mark as with attention-seeking losers who want to be on TV. It is a situation that places those teams in a difficult position, especially for the more popular members of the team, such as cheerleaders and referees. Some teams have taken steps to protect their stars, but the job of obtaining effective security is difficult, especially if a need for heavy weaponry is not in place. The New York Giants, for example, are quite prepared for their team, spending $7 million on the addition of security guards to accompany players on their off-days. Assuring enough security for a professional football team is a difficult process. The details of handling is dependent upon the ability of the team to protect itself, or hire a professional security firm. Athletic clubs, and especially those with high profile teams, must be prepared for
