Teamwork Measure (TM) for primary care practice: psychometric evaluation of the translated and culturally adapted instrument. A core aim of primary health care is to facilitate the quality, patient-centered and efficient use of available services. Patient experience of the service received is one aspect of quality care. Studies suggest that care process and patient outcomes are better when services are coordinated and when the care professionals work together.

The Teamwork Measure (TM) has been developed to measure the extent to which key concepts of teamwork, such as coordination and communication, are in place. TM was developed to support frontline workers' efforts to improve teamwork and reduce communication issues for patients, as well as to better articulate the goals and outcomes of their work. In this study, the psychometric properties of the translated and culturally adapted (German language, Turkish language) TM were evaluated in a sample of primary health care settings. Using a convenience sample of practice teams of general practitioners and practice nurses, TM was completed by the practice team members (n=29). All constructs of TM showed acceptable reliabilities.

Furthermore, the original model fitted the data well. The practice teams positively evaluated TM. However, some differences were observed between the two nationalities in the rated importance of some items. TM may be useful as an outcome measure for practice improvement. In a prospective study a reduction in TM scores can be expected over time. on the potential gender differences in outcomes that should be evaluated in future studies. The strength of this study is its strict inclusion criteria that limit external validity and limit the ability to generalize the results, however, is a significant strength in determining predictors of the mode of delivery in pregnancies complicated by PPH. Although this study is a study of a large number of PPHs, it is not without limitation. First, PPHs were excluded in women with placenta previa. This is a potentially important point. We know that in the presence of placental previa, women are more likely to experience induction of labor and incur the significant associated risks of amniotic fluid embolism and infection. We do not know the frequency of this delivery mode in placenta previa. Having a large sample size reduces the number of study PPH pregnancies that have a mode of delivery that is not determinable in the case of placenta previa, but this is a limitation. The
